

Leonardo awarded contract worth USD 193 million

- Leonardo, through the US subsidiary Leonardo DRS, will provide active protection systems for US Army tanks

Rome, 26 June 2018 - Leonardo, through the US subsidiary Leonardo DRS, has been awarded a contract worth USD 193 million by U.S. Army to provide active protection systems for U.S. Army tanks.

Leonardo DRS will provide the U.S. Army with TROPHY active protection systems for its new Abrams tanks. Under the terms of the contract, Leonardo DRS will provide the Army with TROPHY systems, countermeasures, and maintenance kits. Developed by technology partner Rafael Advanced Defense Systems, TROPHY system provides combat-proven protection against the full range of threats. TROPHY system provides a high level of performance, safety, and life cycle affordability.

Leonardo DRS, based in the U.S. and fully owned by Leonardo, is focused on the supply of products, services and integrated support to the Armed Forces as well as to intelligence agencies and defence companies.